
The Weyrs & Holds of Tenth Pass Pern

Original draft by Lynne Smith & Ron Swartzendruber; updated 2/05 by Holly Hutchison; heraldry by Holly Hutchison

The great majority of the population of Pern are holders -- men, women, and children who live on agricultural holds and who are responsible for raising the crops and livestock that feed the rest of the planet. The social structure of the holds is inherently feudal -- a single Lord holds a vast territory, and has under his command an entire network of minor Holds. In turn, these minor holders may have under their jurisdiction a dozen or so smaller family-sized coholds, with each having a coholder and his extended family taking care of a certain number of fields and/or herds. A family may live for generations on a farm, but that piece of land is not truly their own -- it belongs ultimately to a Lord Holder who may turn that family out of house and hold and replace them with a more deserving family should they not prove themselves skilled enough farmers or beast-tenders. The Lord's Hold is the administrative, educational, and economic heart of any territory, but the smaller Holds are the meat and bones of any Lord's holding.

The vast majority of holders live in small, extended-family sized coholds; only the largest, most prosperous Holds (such as a Lord Holder's community) can afford to have drudges. Most coholds are multi-purpose and self-sufficient -- they will raise one major "cash" crop for the Lord Holder, plus have a smaller garden and have a small number of livestock for their own consumption.
